How to use the metro (subway) and RER (express train)?

The Paris Metro is very easy to use and, given the traffic congestion in Paris, is often much faster than taking a taxi. The various lines are numbered and color-coded. You need to identify the number of the line and name of the station at the end of the line in the direction you wish to go so that you know which way to go in the station.

Understanding the subway zone system

The fare system is based on concentric zones: zones 1-3 include downtown Paris and the closest urban areas, while zones 4 and 5 cover more distant areas, including Versailles and Disneyland Paris®.

Each ticket or travel pass (whether for a day, a week, or a month) has a certain number of zones within which it is valid.

Two exceptions are worth noting:

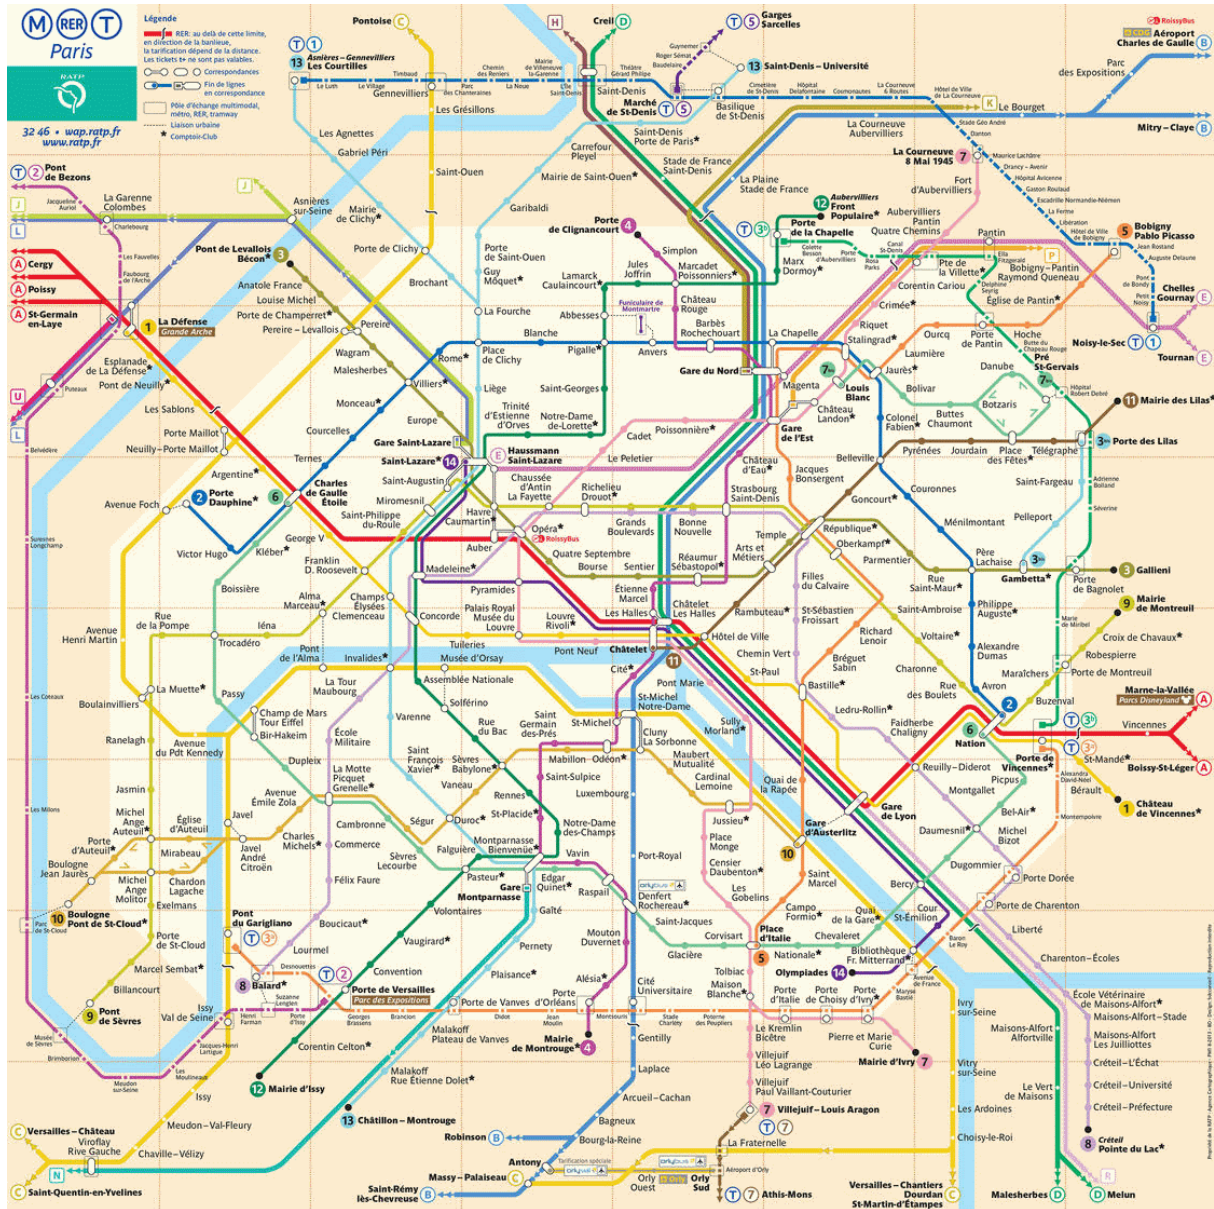

- All Paris metro stations are accessible with a ticket or travel pass that covers only zones 1 and 2, even though some are located geographically in zone 3: for example, you can take the metro to La Défense Grande Arche (zone 3) with a t+ ticket. On the other hand, if you take the RER or a bus, you will need to purchase a ticket that specifies your destination.
- Orlyval, the light train line between the Antony RER station and Orly Airport, has a specific fare.

Parisian and airport taxis

Taxis operate in Paris, day and night.

The special equipment comprises:

- the illuminated sign on the roof of the taxi
- a display meter showing the cost of the journey
- a display at the rear of the vehicle and visible from the exterior which enables the monitoring of the daily duration of use of the vehicle
- a plate fixed to the front right-hand wing of the vehicle bearing the licence number

Warning! Anyone claiming to be a taxi driver who does not have a specially-equipped vehicle is illegal.

You can take a taxi inside the city of Paris:

- by hailing one in the street (it is free if the sign on the roof is lit up and green)
- at a taxi rank
